FLAVOURS WORTH CELEBRATING

Outstanding catering inspiration from Chef Stefan Hogan

From his cookie-baking past to his award-winning present, Jo Caruana chats to the Corinthia Palace Hotel & Spa's creative and charismatic Executive Chef, Stefan Hogan.

Pop downstairs to the Corinthia Palace Hotel & Spa kitchen at any time, and Executive Chef Stefan Hogan will be steering his ship with a strong will and a dry sense of humour.

He is a man with a lot on his plate, and he coordinates the food and beverage department within the hotel – namely the Villa Corinthia, the Summer Kitchen, Rickshaw, the Orange Grove, and the event catering and outside catering niches.

Day after day, his passion, creativity and dedication wow hotel guests by bringing that special touch of magic to every dish. Here he shares his story, as well as his tips for planning your perfect menu.

What is your earliest memory of cooking?

It's back when I was about nine. I loved baking cookies on a Sunday morning and storing them in my mum's biscuit tin so they would keep all week. And I loved eating them too of course!

Did you always want to be a chef?

Not really but I did always love cooking. Then, when I was about 14, people started questioning what I was going to 'do' and I realised food could be an interesting path for me to follow.

What was your first professional experience in the kitchen?

I trained at the Catering School in Valletta and then got a summer job in a restaurant that belonged to one of my teachers. He was the cook back then, and I was the one out front running the show.

What happened next?

Well, I was hooked. I graduated and started out as a trainee at La Dolce Vita, and then joined The Holiday Inn as an apprentice. The hotel was run by a very eccentric German executive chef at the time and he took a liking to me, so I learnt a lot. I was fascinated by his approach to food and the international ingredients he brought to the table. After that I moved to The Holiday Inn in Manchester, where we served over 1,000 guests every day, before returning to Malta to join the re-opened Corinthia Palace in 1992.

Can you name a highlight so far?

Being made Executive Chef of the Corinthia Hotel St George's when I was 28 was pretty special.

What's been your toughest career challenge to-date?

I have been working with the Corinthia Group for over 22 years and there have been so many incredible moments and challenges. In 2003 I was transferred to the Corinthia Hotel Tripoli in the role of executive chef. It was an absolutely thrilling experience and I relish all the memories that came with it.

What's your favourite cookery-related item?

My first cookbook, which I bought back when The Holiday Inn first opened. It cost me the equivalent of €120 (which was quite a lot back then!), and I paid it off €12 at a time! I still have the book of course, and I still consult it on occasion.

What do you love about catering weddings?

Every one is so different and it's such a personal journey, both for the couple and for us in the kitchen. I really like to get to know the couples we cater for and to listen to what they have in mind for their big day. Some of my best inspiration comes from hearing their stories about their relationship, or their dreams for the future.

What's your top tip for couples planning their wedding catering?

Let your imagination run wild and have fun – this is your day. At the Corinthia Palace Hotel & Spa, our entire kitchen team will be at your service and we are always excited to come up with new and unique ideas. Simply guide us as to what you would really love to serve up to your guests, and we'll do the rest!
